OUTRAGED residents bombarded health chiefs with questions during a packed-out meeting to discuss “disgusting” proposals to scrap accident and emergency department at The Whittington Hospital.

Bosses behind a leaked letter which set out proposals to remove a 24-hour A&E at the hospital in Highgate Hill faced a two-hour interrogation from more than 300 concerned residents, hospital workers, campaigners and politicians who flocked to Archway Methodist Church Hall on Monday evening. Former health secretary Frank Dobson was among those pledging unwavering support to the campaign which has snowballed since the proposals were leaked in November.

Richard Greening, of Islington Labour group, directly challenged the panel of health bosses which included the author of the leaked letter – Rachel Tyndall, chief executive of the North Central London NHS division. He told her: “We will use every single part of the powers invested in us to stop you closing that A&E. That money is ours – not yours. We only know about these plans because they were leaked by a member of The Whittington staff who was deeply concerned about what they knew was an evolving plan by NHS bureaucrats.

“They felt you were leading us down this road to an A&E department which should be free at the point of access – but the problem is you may die on the way to accessing it.”

Rachel Tyndall, author of health-cutting plans, faces torrent of abuse

Fears have been raised that A&E departments at neighbouring hospitals will be swamped and lives endangered, particularly those of elderly and vulnerable people living in Haringey which has no major hospital within its borders. Speakers also expressed anger that polyclinics designed to treat people “locally and cheaply” are merely a sweetener in plans for the mass closure of general hospitals across north London.

There was also concern about NHS services being farmed out to profit-hungry private companies. And many believe the closure of the Whittington’s A&E would sound the death knell for other services at the hospital.

Sean Vernell, TUC representative based at Islington College, said: “Efficiency, savings – every word is being used except cuts. There is a real smell of dishonesty about this. We are not stupid, we've been around the block. These polyclinics are untried and untested so why haven't we put the money spent on these into the A&E?"

Paul Brandon, a TUC representative from Holloway bus garage, said: "I could spend an hour telling you about times my colleagues and passengers too have needed The Whittington after being injured. This isn't about value for money - we all know this is about cuts."

Members of the Defend The Whittington Coalition urged people to get involved in the campaign and take part in a mass demonstration past the hospital on February 27. Gesturing to the panel of health chiefs, joint chairwoman Shirley Franklin said: "It seems only four people in this room actually support this. We need to get the message out to people in all the affected boroughs just what these disgusting proposals are about. Don't just bring yourself, bring your entire street, your family all your workmates. These are terrible, terrible proposals. People are horrified and terrified."

But Ms Tyndall repeatedly insisted no decisions have yet been made over the hospital's future and that a full consultation process would take place once options had been decided.

When questioned on the wisdom of drafting proposals before the general and local elections, she said: "We are mindful that whatever government there is, the money that is going to be available to the NHS is going to be less in the future than we have been used to. Whatever the colour of that government we can anticipate that all public services will go through a time of constrained money.

"While we have no control over that, what we do have is a responsibility to use this money, taxpayers' money, to the best possible effect. We are going to have to make difficult decisions."

She added there was "still some way" to go until a formal three-month public consultation period but insisted everyone would get their say.

Frank Dobson MP, who has campaigned to retain services at The Whittington in the past, told the packed-out hall: "I take the idea of The Whittington being run down very personally. Many people will find it difficult to access services further away if the Whittington's A&E closes - and the most vulnerable people will find it most difficult. The services are already there, they have been paid for, this is why this whole thing makes no sense. I'm supporting everything that's being done and I will continue to do so."

Islington TUC president Gary Heather closed the meeting with a rousing speech. He said: "While Rachel and her colleagues have said no decision has been made, I think we can see from tonight that this is clearly in their minds. We need to give a clear message that we'll be mobilising to defend health services in all these boroughs. If you think this is a big turnout and a raucous meeting, you haven't seen anything yet."

A demonstration against the proposals will take place on February 27, with campaigners assembling in Highbury Field in Highbury at midday.

Whittington stroke centre will close

STROKE patients will no longer be sent to The Whittington after March 31, when its stroke service will be decommissioned.

The hospital in Highgate Hill will lose its stroke department, which currently cares for about 340 patients a year in ten beds, following a major shake-up of stroke services in London. From April 1, stroke patients will be taken to the Royal Free Hospital in Pond Street, Hampstead, or University College London Hospital near Euston.

Speaking at a meeting of the hospital's Trust Board last week, chairman Joe Liddane said: "From a Whittington point of view we feel sad about this, and rightly so."

"In another world we'd like things to be different. But from a patient point of view, I think this means better and safer services."

Stroke sufferers will now be treated in eight specialist "super-centres". The review is part of Lord Ara Darzi's ten-year vision for the capital called Healthcare For London.

Photographers and campaigners fight back against zealous police use of anti-terror powers

By Henry Ellis

THE Advertiser's photographers joined thousands of others calling for police to stop using counter-terrorist powers to hamper their work.

On Saturday an estimated 3,000 photographers joined the I'm A Photographer Not A Terrorist demonstration in Trafalgar Square.

The Met has come under pressure to reissue guidelines on the use by officers of Section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000, which gives police the power to stop anyone – including tourists taking holiday snaps of landmarks – and search them on the pretext of counter-terrorism without needing evidence. The Counter-Terrorism Act 2008 further strengthened these powers and tens of thousands of innocent people have been searched, prompting claims the powers are being widely abused.

Anne-Marie Sanderson, this paper's chief photographer, said: "I haven't personally been stopped and searched but we have been intimidated by PCSOs who haven't been trained properly in photographic law. We're not terrorists, we are professionals doing a job. An officer on a cordon should know they have no right to search us or confiscate equipment."

"Section 44 was not intended to hamper photographers, but to stop terrorism. We don't break the law to get photos, so to use this power to prevent us doing our job is an abuse of the law."

Under the Act, any constable in uniform in any area authorised by a senior officer can carry out a stop-and-search "if the person giving it considers it expedient for the prevention of acts of terrorism". Section 58 of the Act makes it an offence to collect information that might be useful to anyone planning a terrorist attack, specifically including photographs. On January 12 the European Court of Human Rights ruled that Section 44 breached human rights but the government is set to appeal the decision.

'We don't break the law to get our photos so to use this power to prevent us doing our job is an abuse'

Marc Vallée, organiser of the event, said: "It was about exercising our rights to take a picture in public. We didn't ask for permission from the police because we were protesting about a common law right to be in Trafalgar Square taking photographs."

"With Section 44 we're talking hundreds of thousands of people stopped and searched."

"The problem is the legislation is being used to target everybody where police can't use other counter-terror legislation which requires them to have reason to suspect someone. There is no evidence that the use of a Section 44 stop-and-search has ever stopped a terrorist attack."

"It's ironic that we have been told that the war on terror is being waged to protect our civil liberties and yet this part of it seems to be taking away our simple right to take a photo in public. They say it's because I might be a terrorist, but if I was a PCSO I don't think I'd walk up to someone and ask to search them under Section 44. I'd want anti-terror police to deal with them."

Haringey operations Superintendent Chris Barclay said: "We encourage officers and the public to be vigilant against terrorism."

"Officers must have the discretion to stop and talk to people to establish whether they are up to no good or not, but we recognise the balance between effective policing and protecting people who live and work in Haringey and respecting the rights of the media and general public to take photos. "Guidance has been made clear to officers and PCSOs through briefings and internal communications." news.haringey@nlhnews.co.uk

Anger over 5,769 people stopped last year

POLICE have been slammed for using "illegal" powers to stop and search thousands of people.

The European Court of Human Rights has ruled that Section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000, which allows police officers to stop and search any member of the public without grounds for suspicion, breaches human rights. The powers were used by Haringey officers 5,769 times between January and September 2009 and a staggering 1,161 times in March 2009 alone – meaning up to 37 were stopped in the borough each day that month under the legislation.

Following criticism of the practice, in which police can stop and search anyone giving a reason, the rules were tightened in July, limiting searches to specific "hotspots". The number in Haringey had dropped to 212 by September, suggesting directives had started to filter down to beat bobby level. The news is of particular relevance this week after the UK terror threat was raised from "substantial" to "severe", meaning a terrorist attack is considered "highly likely".

Councillor Ron Aitken, Haringey Liberal Democrat spokesman on crime, criticised Haringey officers. He said: "If the police are worried about specific individuals or likely terrorist activity, they need to explain that to the public. It appears they are using Section 44 to stop and search large numbers of people and so alienating the people that might be able to provide them with intelligence.

"The response I get from the police on this is always that they don't stop anybody without reason. But some people are being stopped two, three, four times over the course of several weeks and their trust in the police is undermined. They should stop harassing people going about their normal business."

A Met police spokeswoman said: "The threat remains real, and stop-and-search can deter and disrupt terrorist activity and create a hostile environment for terrorists. Protecting the public remains our priority. As a result, refined tactics were introduced across the Met in July 2009."

"This means that Section 44 powers are now only deployed at pre-identified significant locations, such as iconic sites and crowded places, and when specific operations are agreed for specific areas."

Children will get a step up into university and beyond with new centre

CHILDREN in Haringey will be encouraged to "reach for the stars" at a new Tottenham centre.

Teachers, young people and parents attended the opening of IntoUniversity in Risley Avenue where staff will help with homework as well as running workshops and inspiring young people to go on to university.

Haringey was targeted because it includes some of the most poverty-stricken areas in the UK - nearly a third of the borough's secondary pupils are eligible for free school meals, twice the national average.

Angellisa Robinson, a Year 6 student from Lancasterian Primary School, based in King's Road, Tottenham, spoke at the launch event, which was also attended by higher education minister and Tottenham MP David Lammy. She said: "I thought this would give me an even better education."

"I've enjoyed learning about the importance of university and get help with homework. Coming has helped me achieve a lot".

Staff at the centre hope to address underachievement

Star-struck: The youngsters on Thursday and social exclusion under the free Focus programme by building relationships with children from the age of seven. Centres are funded by The Sutton Trust.

Chief executive Rachel Carr said: "It's wonderful to see so many people here, and it's exciting to open our fifth IntoUniversity. We look forward to continuing to inspire young people to reach for the stars."

Pupils from Risley Avenue Primary School, based in The Roundway, Tottenham, were some of the first to try out the centre. They took part in a taster session including a What Is A University? workshop.

Wood Green gains its 24-hour police station once again

By Lucy Purdy

WOOD Green police station will now be open around the clock after a decision to close it after 9pm was reconsidered.

Haringey police decided to reopen the station in High Road after a campaign by Haringey Liberal Democrats to improve police services in the area. The decision was revealed at a council meeting on Monday following a question by Lib Dem crime spokesman Councillor Ron Aitken. The front counter will now be manned 24 hours a day with the number of visits monitored to see if it is "operationally necessary or viable".

Lynne Featherstone, Hornsey and Wood Green MP, said: "This is fantastic news for Wood Green. A lot of crime happens at night but for some time now people have been poorly served by a barely operational police station. It's so important just to know that the police will be there for you at any time, day or night, if something should happen. I think this will make a huge difference."

Mr Aitken, who represents Crouch End ward, added: "Being out on the streets talking to people, it's clear having a 24-hour police station is high up on the wish-list, so I welcome this terrific news."

The decision to scale back the counter service was made before borough commander Dave Grant took up his post in July 2008 and has been reviewed after councillors and residents complained. There are also proposals for the counter to be moved to the former Fishmonger's Arms, next to the Civic Centre in Wood Green, which already houses the Alexandra Safer Neighbourhood team.

The current priorities for the Noel Park Safer Neighbourhood team, which covers Wood Green, are anti-social behaviour by groups of youths, and that related to alcohol as well as dog fighting.

The busy intersection where Green Lanes, Lordship Lane and Bounds Green Road meet is often flagged as a hotspot for crime in the borough.

Barker loses appeal over rape charge

ONE of the trio responsible for the death of Baby Peter has lost an appeal against his conviction for raping a two-year-old girl.

Steven Barker, 33, partner of Peter Connelly's mother Tracey, had claimed he did not receive a fair trial and that his conviction was "unsafe". He had been ordered to spend at least ten years behind bars for raping the girl as well as 12 years for causing or allowing the death of 17-month-old Peter in a separate trial. His challenge was rejected by the Court of Appeal.

Responding to Barker's claim, Lord Chief Justice Lord Judge said the young victim had at trial been a "compelling and competent witness" and that the jury were entitled to decide the allegation was true. He added: "Unless we simply resuscitate the outdated misconceptions about the evidence of children, there is no justifiable basis for interfering with the verdict."

Peter was found dead in his cot with more than 50 injuries, including fractured ribs and a broken back, at a house in Penshurst Road, Tottenham, in August 2007.

Tracey Connelly, 28, and Jason Owen, 37, of Bromley, were also jailed.

Precious little hope

Precious: Based on the Novel "Push" by Sapphire (15)

Dir: Lee Daniels
Starring: Gabourey Sidibe, Mo'Nique, Mariah Carey

2010 – year of the outsider? Last week we had the first Arab hero of a western movie that I can remember, and this week it's the turn of the first obese black girl.

Both A Prophet and Precious are extraordinary, intense films which staple your eyes open from the start and should be honoured at this year's Academy Awards.

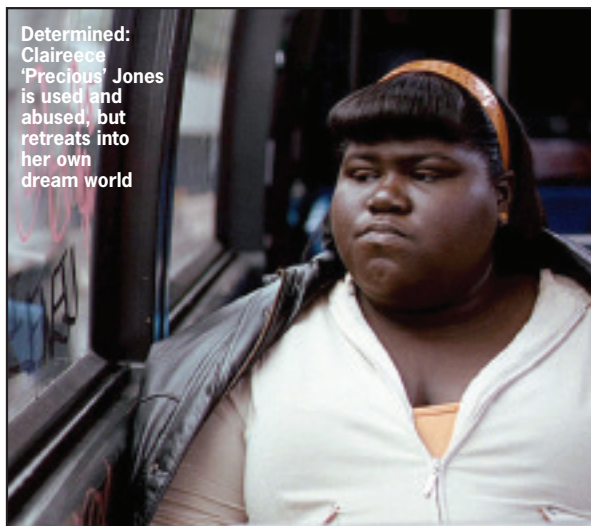

In a refreshing moment of artistic respect, the original source material is credited in the actual title.

Set in 1987, author and performance poet Sapphire's debut novel tells the uncompromising story of Claireece "Precious" Jones, an overweight, illiterate 16-year-old living with her mother in Harlem.

Raped by her father, she gives birth to a Down's syndrome child and is now carrying his second baby. Far from sympathising, her mum is jealous and regularly beats and abuses Precious herself.

Hiding in a fantasy world in which she's a celebrity, the remarkably resilient teenager finds a form of acceptance and love in an alternative school for problem kids which helps Precious realise she is not the

Determined: Claireece 'Precious' Jones is used and abused, but retreats into her own dream world

"ugly, stupid bitch" she's always been told she is.

A hard watch in many respects, director Lee Daniels never dwells in the darkness but is careful to offer hope in the aspirational dreams of Precious and her positive actions.

In this helped by an instinctive performance of brutal, emotional honesty by newcomer Sidibe.

Daniels must also be applauded for peppering his cast with familiar non-actors and coaxing out genuinely affecting performances.

Stand-up comic Mo'Nique is terrifying as the violent mum while Lenny Kravitz as a nurse who befriends the truculent teenager is virtually unrecognisable in his cloak of downbeat sensitivity.

But the director's greatest achievement must surely be (a) persuading Mariah Carey to show the world how she looks first thing in the morning and (b) proving that, as Precious' social worker, the singer can actually act a bit too.

A Prophet (18)

Goodfellas duffs up The Shawshank Redemption in this violent tale of one man's rise to the top in the clink. One of the best prison dramas and a taut thriller ensures the two-and-a-half hours skip past in snappy style.

The Red Shoes (U)

Rerelease of great expressionist dream – one of the triumphs from the Powell and Pressburger post-war powerhouse. To call it a movie about dance is a disservice, as obsession, madness, love, death and the limits of creativity are explored in technicolour.

The Road (15)

It didn't take long for the first great film of the new decade to emerge. Cormac McCarthy's post-apocalyptic novel of one man's survival with his son is transferred to the big screen in a picture of terrible, visceral beauty that demands to be seen.

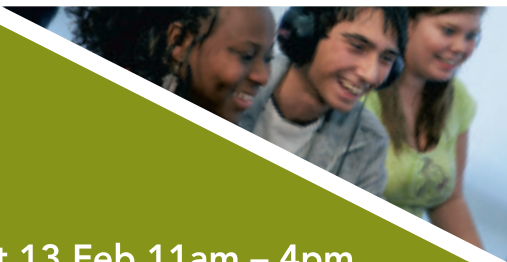

Nine (12A)

Daniel Day Lewis and a host of A-List beauties capture the style – if not the substance – of a 1960s Fellini film. Chicago director Rob Marshall attempts to dazzle-dazzle us again but the results are more aesthetic thanks to the lack of decent songs.

Show has Layla on the ropes

WHAT IF... Layla Rosa had known her father and grown up a Muslim woman?

In a very personal piece of high-wire exploration, the theatre practitioner balances her lost heritage with a typically physical performance in what promises to challenge us mentally as she's stretched physically.

"I have never met my father, he left when my mum was pregnant, and he was Saudi Arabian," she said. "So I've always been curious how it would have been to have grown up a Muslim. I've met some Muslim women's groups and it's about my own personal and cultural journey which has been painful but, in the absence of finding him, has connected me somehow with another part of myself."

Naturally the veil became an important part of her research.

"I explore in a very simple way what it is to cover and how it feels to wear this garment," she said. "Would I have had to wear one to do my work as an aerial artist? It's so easy for us to see the veil as a symbol of oppression in this country but it's a lot more than that and there's a lot of love and devotion involved."

Using her trademark rope work, combined with video images and layers of sound What If... looks to further consolidate Jacksons Lane's reputation for cutting edge, contemporary theatre.

● Layla's show takes place from next Wednesday to Saturday at the Highgate venue. On Friday and Saturday a short work-in-progress called Strings on Strings follows What If... For ticket details and times call the box office on 020 8341 4421.

KINGS GO CHRISTMAS CRACKERS FOR CHARITY

It's all in a good cause and happens once a year! Kings Group and Metropolis Surveyors put on another action packed Christmas extravaganza this time in aid of children's cancer. Approx 150 people attended what was part of the long fundraising tradition that the Estate Agency, Lettings Surveying and Financial Services arm of this property group hold in support of good causes. Chris Bramham AKA Kris Kringle said "at this time of the year we have to remember the boys and girls who need our support, who are facing Xmas either in hospital or battling this terrible disease. This is particularly poignant for us this year as one of our own little Grace Benson is fighting this disease and tonight is all part of showing our support for her and her family Mark, Rachel and Reece". On the night nearly £3,000 was raised and as we have entered 2010 further charity raising events will be held. If you would like to make a donation or are interested in supporting future events, please contact Amanda Swann. Amanda.swann@kings-group.net. Ho Ho Ho!

Boss fumes as Spurs sunk by Beckford double

By Lee Husson

HARRY REDKNAPP admitted Tottenham "threw the game away" after cup hero Jermaine Beckford smashed home a 96th-minute penalty to earn plucky Leeds a replay at Elland Road after Saturday's dramatic FA Cup clash at White Hart Lane.

Spurs were held 2-2 by the League One club, despite taking the lead twice through Peter Crouch and Roman Pavlyuchenko.

Jermain Defoe also missed a penalty as Beckford – whose goal at Old Trafford in the previous round dumped Manchester United out of the competition – scored twice, with his second coming from the spot deep in added-time after he was tripped by Michael Dawson.

"I'm disappointed because we threw the game away when we had it in the bag," Redknapp said.

"It could have been a penalty. It was a tight one.

"I wouldn't argue with the referee, he's made an honest decision. Sometimes you get them and sometimes you don't.

"Michael took a chance and tried to win the ball. He did get a foot on the ball."

Leeds keeper Casper Ankergren frustrated Spurs just as Boaz Myhill did the previous weekend as he made a string of fine stops in the opening 20 minutes, culminating in a diving save to keep out Defoe's tame spot-kick.

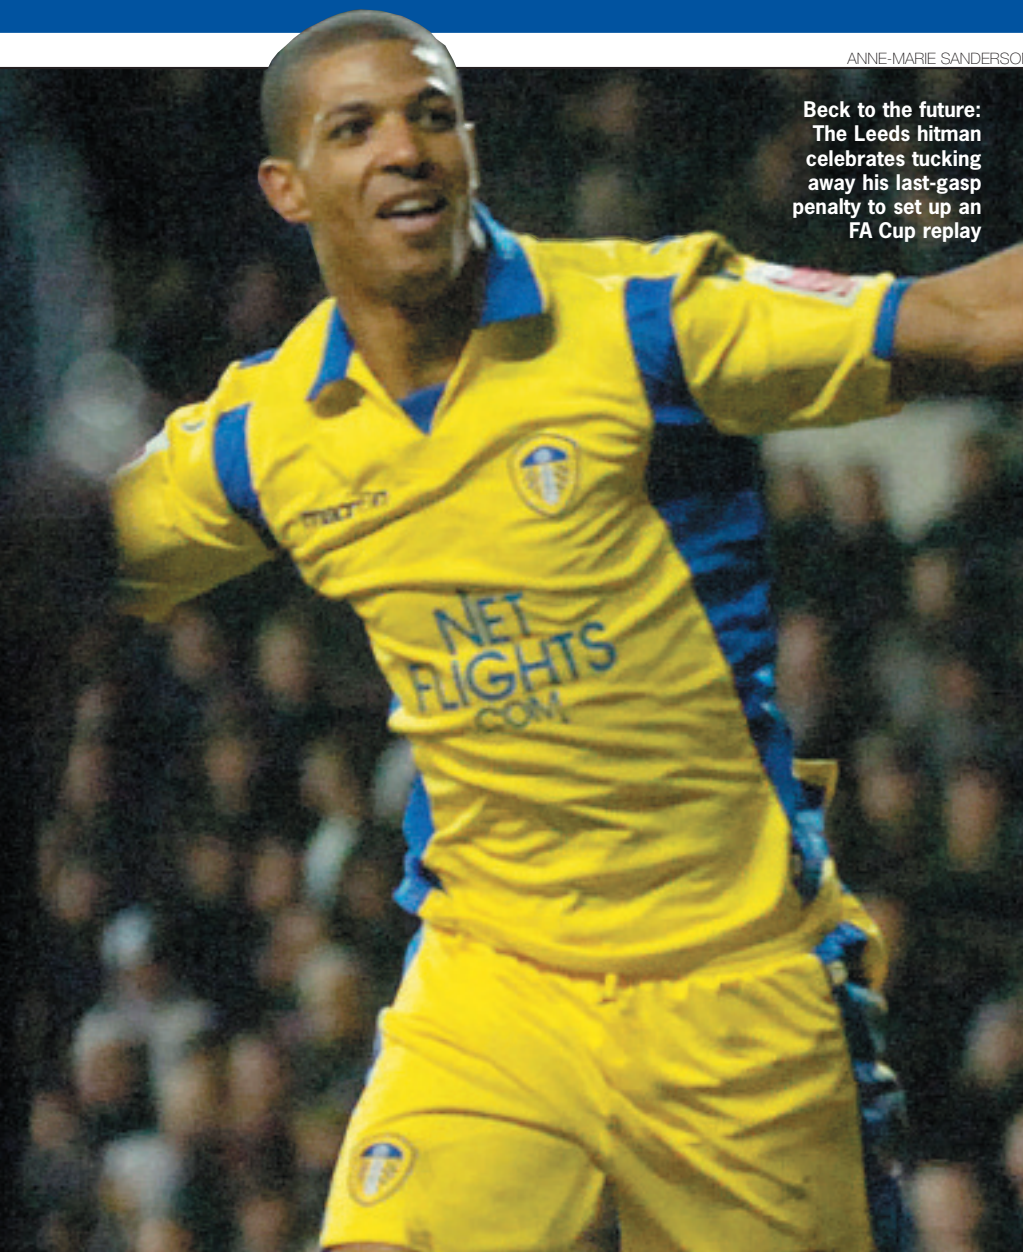

But the home side did eventually find a way through just before half-time when Crouch slammed home after Niko Kranjcar saw another shot saved.

Beckford pulled a goal back for the spirited visitors shortly after the restart, bundling home from a corner as Spurs failed to clear.

Pavlyuchenko then stepped off the bench to score with his first touch, dummieing a pass before latching on to Defoe's through-ball to fire home, but Dawson was adjudged to have brought down Beckford at the death, and the former Wealdstone striker lashed home from 12 yards to set up an enticing rematch.

Spurs were due to return to league action by travelling to Fulham last night.

Same old story for new-look Skolars

THE LONDON SKOLARS launched their season in disappointing fashion as they suffered a humbling 56-0 defeat at the hands of Harlequins in the Capital Challenge on Friday.

The arrival of head coach James Massara and a host of new signings during the off season had raised hopes that the Skolars would be able to improve on their dreadful results of 2009.

But Massara's men were comprehensively outclassed by their Superleague opponents, who ran in a total of ten tries in a one-sided encounter.

Despite the comprehensive defeat, Massara insisted that there were plenty of positives.

He said: "The Quins are a good Superleague side who were looking to prepare fully for their first game of the season.

"It was never going to be an easy day at the office for us, but I am very pleased with how we applied ourselves for parts of the game.

"I now have a much better idea of where we are in our preparation."

The Skolars will be hoping to get back on track on Sunday when they begin their Northern Rail Cup campaign with a trip to Dewsbury Rams.

And the match could see former New Zealand Warriors centre Jason Cook make his debut after he joined the club last week.

Massara added: "I am delighted we can have him in London in 2010.

"The Capital Challenge came a bit early for him, but he will be in contention for the Northern Rail Cup."
